PRIVATE IN 2D INF. PURCHASES DISCHARGE TO WAR FOR AUSTRIA

[Special Star-Bulletin Correspondence]

PORT SHAFTER, August 5. —Andrew Hajdu, a private in F Company of the 2nd Infantry, was discharged yesterday from the United States army by purchase after having served 33 months of the three-year period for which he enlisted.

Hajdu's reason for leaving the service is that he intends to return to his native land and re-enter the military service of that country and take part in the war in which it is now involved. That country is Austria and although no demand has been made upon him, the ex-American soldier feels that his duty calls him to his colors. Born in Hungary and educated in the schools of his native town, he later attended a military school as a part of the required service demanded of its citizens. This course in military training required two years and at the completion of this period Hajdu served the required one year with the 44th Regiment of Infantry in the capacity of a sub-lieutenant. Having thus fulfilled the three years of military duty demanded under his country's laws he elected to leave the army and came to the United States in search of a future. Five months later he enlisted in our army with the idea of learning the language and with the ultimate intention of making a try for a commission. He calculated that it would take one full enlistment period of three years to give him a complete knowledge of the language and eliminate his accent and then on a second period of enlistment he would make application to take the examinations for a commission as an officer. His plans as to his future have been changed by the developments of recent days and he will now renounce his intentions to become a citizen of this country and upon return to Austria will again swear allegiance to his emperor and the country of his birth. Hajdu will re-enter the Austrian service as a second lieutenant in the regiment in which he held the grade of sub-lieutenant and will at once go into active service.

In conversation this morning Hajdu expressed himself as being well satisfied with his experience as a soldier in the United States army and stated that he had profited greatly in a military way by his training.

He was especially impressed by the knowledge of sanitary matters that is imparted to the soldiers of our country during their enlistment and believed that his knowledge would be of great value to him in his new position as an officer. Commenting on the life of the American soldier in general, and with especial reference to that life in Hawaii, Hajdu was of the opinion that the life was inclined to be somewhat monotonous as regards amusements and diversions but that the training and habits imposed were of great value to the young man of honest intentions and purpose. He stated that the average educational attainments of the American soldier was far in advance of that of the soldier in the army of his readopted country but remarked that the distinction between the grades of private and non-commissioned officer was not as well marked here as in the European armies. This he believed was due largely to the non-commissioned officers themselves but was partly accounted for by the Democratic spirit that pervades all of our institutions. His treatment at the hands of the officers in his late regiment received only praise and he was outspoken as to that point. Referring to the daily life of the soldier serving in Honolulu Hajdu was equally outspoken and said that in his opinion much could be done by the citizens to improve conditions, but declined to give his ideas as to plans that might be adopted for that improvement.

From his acquaintance with the armies of Austria, Germany and Italy all derived at first hand through service or travel, Hajdu was positive that the American soldier had all the best of his brothers in arms in the countries named as regards service in general and especially in clothing and rations; but, without claiming expert knowledge on the subject, he ventured to express the opinion that the American soldier had too much routine drill and instruction and not a sufficient amount of theoretical instruction; his idea being that the soldier's interest could be stimulated by lectures and talks by officers that would cause discussion and study among the enlisted men themselves and thus remove in part the tendency to stagnation that drill alone, with its mechanical routine, seems to produce. Hajdu is evidently a man of education and the fact that he speaks five languages would seem to vouch for his standing in that regard.
